What's in a name?
How should we describe and define speech sound disorder in children and why does it matter?

ialp
International Association of Communication Sciences and Disorders
The non-profit worldwide organization of professionals and scientists in communication, voice, speech language pathology, audiology and swallowing

For many years we have debated terminology for describing the needs of children with communication impairment across the globe. Researchers, specialists, clinicians, parents and individuals with lived experience of the conditions have contributed to these discussions.

The IALP Child Speech Committee have organised a series of panel meetings to discuss the overlap and distinctions between the label 'Speech Sound Disorder' and other closely related conditions. We invite you to join these meetings which will consist of short presentations by key figures in the field. You will have an opportunity to submit questions which will be considered by the panel on the day.

The meetings will take place virtually in October and December 2021 and February and April 2022. Participation is free but we need you to register so that we can send you details for how to join the meeting.

Details of how to book will be available from 1st September via the IALP Website and twitter. Follow @IALP_Global for updates.
